Spring: A Season of New Events

By Brian Clark

A Night at the Theater

During a season of new buds on trees and flowers shoots, the Lackawanna Historical Society is proud to debut two new signature events.

In the first event, members relived the days of Scranton's theater district with a night of cocktails, dinner, and a performance while celebrating A Night at The Theatre in the Hotel Jermyn on March 27.

Members enjoyed a performance of Nancy Hasty's Lawnchairs, a Dark Comedy World Premiere and winner of the Jerry Kaufman Award for Best Play of 2009. The performance was given by the Electric Theater Company.

The night's setting was the Hotel Jermyn, a beautiful building

YOU LIVE HERE, YOU SHOULD KNOW THIS!

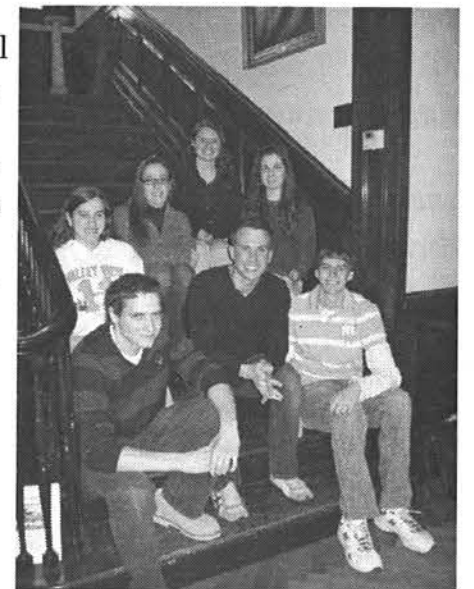

Ever taunt a friend or acquaintance about forgetting a piece of local lore? Ever walk down the street and find yourself arguing over a piece of trivia? We've got the perfect quiz game for you.

The Lackawanna Historical Society is proud to present the inaugural match-ups of its trivia show "You Live Here, You Should Know This!" on April 30 and May 1. Competing teams of well-known figures from North-eastern Pennsylvania square off to test their knowledge of our amazing local history in Shopland Hall of the Scranton Cultural Center.

Each night is co-hosted by one of two local celebrities—John

A Word from the President...

Hello everyone,

At this encouraging time of year when our thoughts turn toward a new season, we can look forward to the many programs and activities offered by the Lackawanna Historical Society presented in this newsletter. As president of the Society, I am grateful to the members and volunteers, as well as the staff and trustees, involved in making all this happen. Equally as important, I am grateful to the members and organizations who contribute so generously to support our offerings.

So that we might continue to work to collect, preserve and present the history of our community effectively, we want to communicate with you easily and quickly. Go to www.lackawannahistory.org to check out the Lackawanna Historical Society website. You can e-mail us at maryann@lackawannahistory.org if you have a suggestion, comment or question. Be assured we will keep in touch with you also. Enjoy the days ahead, and again thank you very much for your continued and enthusiastic support.

Sincerely,
Michael Gilmartin

designed by John A. Duckworth. Previously, the property was home to the Forest House, which was razed late in 1894 or early 1895 to make way for The Jermyn.

Mr. John Jermyn had difficulty with the city while obtaining a permit for his new building. The design meant the building would encroach on the reservation on Spruce Street. Jermyn and the city fought the dispute in court before the ruling came down in Jermyn's favor.

Jermyn encountered another challenge to his plans for a large hotel. He was unable to come to terms with the owner of the adjoining property on Wyoming Avenue. Plans were drawn up for the building to be limited only to the Forest House site. Shortly before the building began, however, Jermyn and the adjoining property owner came to terms, and the plans were revised. The Hotel Jermyn would be the enlarged structure that we know today.

One of Scranton's first all-steel structures, the Hotel Jermyn opened under the management of Fred S. Godfrey—a day John Jermyn dreamt of but was unable to see. He died in 1902. The property and the building went through several changes of ownership in its initial decades.

Jermyn's estate was managed by Joseph and George B. Jermyn. In 1923 George B. Jermyn sold the hotel to George Maxey and Frank P. Benjamin. From 1926 to 1937 the hotel was sold to several different individuals. This became known as the Jermyn Hotel Corp.

Ownership continued to change after the property was seized by Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in 1937.

Time and changing lifestyles took away the Jermyn's business model, and today the Jermyn Hotel is no longer a hotel. The building provides permanent housing for the elderly and disabled individuals. The Electric Theater Company—the site of our first spring event—finds its home in the second floor Spruce Street side of the historic Hotel Jermyn.

ENOUGH ABOUT TAXES... LET'S TALK ABOUT DEATH!

The Times-Tribune archivist Brian Fulton will discuss the history of obituaries and also read some examples.

Come by to hear about the OTHER unavoidable part of life.

This event will last about 1 hour (including questions)—giving you plenty of time to fill out your request for an extension and get it to the post office by midnight.
